NOTES

The first sighting of Batsquatch occurred shortly after the Mt. St. Helens eruption in May of 1980—leading many to believe that it came from an area deep inside the mountain where it had been living for thousands of years. Forced out of seclusion, the Batsquatch searches the mountains of the Pacific Northwest for a new home, away from humans and Bluetooth speakers. Use extreme caution while exploring mountainous areas and try to avoid playing any swamp rock. Batsquatch hates swamp rock.
